Ordering DoorDash? Proposed California law would share your information with restaurants

A new bill, supported by the CRA and introduced yesterday by Asm. Lorena Gonzalez, D-San Diego, would require food delivery platforms like DoorDash to share customer information – including a phone number and a delivery address – with the restaurants they order from.

“Restaurants shouldn’t fear losing their customers when they don’t agree to the conditions of some multi-million dollar food delivery app,” Gonzalez said. “This bill will put the power back in the hands of small business owners in California.”

Partner Content: How Anti-Fraternization policies can ensure a happy Valentine's Day

Valentine's Day is fast approaching, which means love is in the air – and employers should beware. Statistically speaking, the workplace can be the epicenter of romance. According to a 2019 survey from Vault.com, 58% of employees have engaged in a romantic relationship with a colleague. With the rise of the #MeToo movement, such statistics may make you uneasy – and for good reason.
