Most vaccinated California workers must keep masks on

California regulators made a controversial decision last week that means workers can only go without a mask if every employee in a room is fully vaccinated against the coronavirus. California's employer community overwhelmingly opposed this decision.

"A fully vaccinated server could work a lunch shift at a restaurant, and then go out to dinner with their family or friends at the same restaurant in the evening and not be required to wear a mask, even though they had to wear a mask earlier in the day while at work,” said the CRA’s senior legislative director, Katie Hansen.

California will allow to-go cocktails, outdoor dining expansions to stay after June 15, Newsom says

“Sixty percent of California’s restaurants are opened by people of color,” said the CRA’s President and CEO, Jot Condie. “When you look at the sales tax revenue that this industry generated prior to the pandemic, it underscores not only the important role that our industry plays in the fabric of every community, but the role it plays in all economies, local and statewide.”

Franchise restaurant owners sigh in relief as California’s FAST Act fails

The California State Assembly has voted down AB 257, a bill strongly opposed by the CRA and the International Franchise Association (IFA.) The bill’s aim was to create a “government council,” a group of political appointees that would have had the authority to make labor law, sidestepping the way that is done today—through elected representatives in the state legislature.
