CA CORONAVIRUS NEWS

It is March 18, 2020, and this is what you need to know: California restaurant dining rooms are closed, per a directive from Gov. Gavin Newsom, which you can read more about here. In many counties and cities, there are now orders to shelter-in-place, with the understanding that people may leave their homes for essential tasks, like buying food. Drive-thru, delivery, and takeout orders are still allowed. The CRA is urging public officials to continue allowing restaurant kitchens to remain open and serve food – the need for meals continues and has grown in households with children home from school.

Restaurants and their workers need help

There are 1.4 million people who work in California restaurants. They are all being affected by the current crisis, with perhaps the most widespread impact to front-of-house workers. Listen to CRA CEO Jot Condie discuss those impacts here. (You’ll find Jot at about 40 minutes into this broadcast on Capital Public Radio’s Insight.) Click here to find a list of resources on the CRA’s website.

#CarryoutWednesday

Earlier this week, the National Restaurant Association started an effort to get restaurants and their guests spreading the word about the availability of delivery, pickup and drive-thru ordering. The hashtag the NRA is using is #CarryoutWednesday. Whatever day of the week it is, social media is one place to let your guests know that you are still preparing and serving meals.
