The CRA to California governor, lawmakers: Here is what restaurants need to survive

The CRA is asking Gov. Gavin Newsom and state lawmakers to help solve issues around business continuity insurance, to enact a statewide moratorium on evictions from business properties, and to pause minimum wage increases until restaurants can get back on their feet. LA council OKs more paid sick leave at large companies, for workers affected by the coronavirus

During a marathon, 11-hour meeting last week, the Los Angeles City Council voted to require employers with more than 500 employees to give paid sick leave to workers who may not benefit from a recent federal bill that mandated sick leave. The city of San Jose is now taking similar action: San Jose to adopt emergency sick leave policy for residents affected by coronavirus

French Laundry restaurateur sues insurer for coronavirus losses

Restaurant owners are growing more and more frustrated – and some are suing – because insurers are not covering losses due to the coronavirus. Insurers say their policies would have to be retroactively rewritten to cover these losses. The CRA is asking California state leaders to come up with a solution, a request outlined in the letter to the governor, shared above.

The Ordering.app Now part of Google

If you're racing to fulfill pickup orders, there's a new source of help and it comes from our friends at Google, who are making The Ordering.app available for free until July 1st to restaurants trying to navigate this new world of closed dining rooms and social distancing. Restaurants who have used it give it high marks, and we figured that these days, you'd want to hear about a tool that works and is affordable!

For now, we're grateful to the geniuses at The Ordering.app for working to make takeout what it should be – easy and cost-effective.
