Governor says reopening California will begin this week amid coronavirus crisis

Gov. Gavin Newsom has announced that some of the state's retail stores can reopen for curbside pickup as early as this Friday. Restaurants can't reopen until the state reaches a later stage of reopening, but individual counties can make a case for taking further steps earlier by submitting a "containment" plan for coronavirus to the state.

SF could permanently lose half its restaurants to coronavirus pandemic, group says

The Golden Gate Restaurant Association says that as many as half of restaurants in San Francisco could close permanently because of the impacts of the coronavirus. The CRA believes that statewide, as many as 30% of restaurants could close permanently, in part because many were struggling before the pandemic began.

Here's how much it costs restaurants when you order through delivery apps. (Hint: It can be more than they earn.)

Third-party delivery apps had said they would help restaurants survive while their dining rooms are closed. According to many restaurants, that's not turning out to be true. A restaurant in Chicago is reporting that out of $1,100 in orders, it was left with just $400.
